

Geraldine Nordfeldt

Geraldine is a seasoned media and communications professional with more than 15 years' experience helping individuals and organisations craft and deliver compelling stories - whether in front of a camera or in the boardroom.

Her career spans roles both on air and behind the scenes in television newsrooms across Sydney, Canberra, and Singapore, as well as senior positions in judicial and corporate communications. She understands how to translate complex messages for different audiences and high-stakes environments.

Geraldine served as the Media Manager for the Supreme Court of New South Wales for a period also, dealing with journalists and judges. Her role involved managing intense media scrutiny, while balancing legal sensitivities and public interest.

She began her journalism career in regional television news in Orange and Canberra, later moving into print as a newspaper reporter and columnist in the Federal Parliamentary press gallery. She then joined 7 News Sydney, covering major national and international events. While based in Singapore, she produced Asia Business Report for the BBC and contributed as a foreign correspondent throughout Southeast Asia.

Geraldine holds a Bachelor of Arts in Communications (Journalism) from Charles Sturt University. She brings a calm, insightful, and strategic approach to communications coaching- supporting senior executives, spokespeople, and professionals to build confidence and clarity in media, presentations, and stakeholder engagements.
